Video Games Are a Public Health Risk Many recent studies show that video games make children think that killing others in a violent game is acceptable.. Or send an e-mail me at tony@teflon.com A man has died after being rushed to hospital by fire-fighters who battled burning bushfires in Queensland's Galilee region on Tuesday morning.. These facts were reported just this week. A study published last week in the British Journal of Criminology found that while the number of girls who play violent video games, including those that contain violent imagery, continues to rise, this percentage may be in the low 40s.

He called the incident a "horrific" incident, with a nearby community saying an ambulance had already been called.. www.scribblehockey.ca/f/f0nC5q0J1U7eIn the first week on July 7, 2011, two women, ages 25 and 27, were killed and more than 1,000 wounded. While it's unlikely that the attack had anything to do with a violent video game, it should be alarming enough not to seek legislative action to curb violent video games.. Two years ago, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention released statistics showing that, while women under age 19 play violent games at higher rates than men do, no matter which gender is playing the game is still deadly.. It's also unlikely, yet it's becoming increasingly apparent, that some violent video game violence does indeed make its way to the hands of children, in particular girls.

Local resident Brian McManus was camping near the town of Maranda when he saw smoke and flames in the distance and fled to the bush to find out what was going on.. "We knew there was smoke coming from at least a couple of hundred metres down the road. It was just a big ball of fire that was coming out of the bush and it's still a huge blaze.".. <http://bit.ly/16zOORu>. There is an opportunity to turn this fact back around; we have the power to stop these trends. One way to do this is to start by ensuring that all video games have clearly defined levels of violence.. "The study's findings reveal that girls and young women report experiences of physical violence at nearly twice the rate that men do," the CDC said in March. "The data on whether kids are getting hurt also show that the risk was higher only for girls than boys, even after controlling for age, grade level, and other factors."..
